

Seal of approval

Southern Elephant Seal
Mirounga leonina

If you're the kind of person who likes exploring unspoiled corners of the world, then you must visit the Falklands. These are large islands and a two week stay will allow you to see them in depth. The coasts are fringed with rocky shores and white sandy beaches that hold colonies of lounging sea lions, feuding Elephant Seals and noisy penguins. Inland there are lonely rivers and wetlands, home to wild duck and swan.

There are mountains and plains too, dotted with tiny farming settlements where the pioneer spirit survives. Four-wheel drive vehicles and light aircraft give you access to all these areas. We are sure that a visit will receive your seal of approval. Contact us at Falkland House and we will gladly tell you more about the Falkland Islands.

Falkland Islands Tourist Board · 14 Broadway · London SW1H 0BH · Tel: 071 222 2542

Please send me further details about the Falkland Islands BBCW

Name _____

Address _____

Please send me the 'Where Nature Is Still In Charge' video I enclose a cheque for £8.00 as a refundable deposit. tick

LEARN TO BE AN EXPERT ON ORNITHOLOGY

WITH OUR EASY-TO-FOLLOW BIRDWATCHING HOME STUDY COURSE

Unique Home Study Course designed to improve your knowledge of Birds, their behaviour, evolution, anatomy and much, much more!

You can enjoy this course at any age.

You don't need to live in the country or even have a garden. The course incorporates six easy to follow study units including: habits, design, breeding, social behaviour, migration, evolution and conservation. For your own FREE INFORMATION PACK

FREE BIRDWATCHING KIT WITH YOUR COURSE

PHONE 041 221 7373 NOW!

or POST THE COUPON BELOW TODAY

PLEASE SEND ME MY FREE INFORMATION PACK ON BIRDWATCHING HOME STUDY COURSE

Mrs/Miss/Ms _____

Address _____

P.Code _____

INTERNATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS
Dept. RT084312/314 High Street., Sutton, Surrey SM1 1PR.
Telephone: 041-221 7373. (24 hrs). Fax: 041-221 8151.

natural CLASSIC

Each month we ask one of our experts to tell us what wildlife book classic – novel, field guide or treatise – has most influenced him or her, and to list a personal library of top ten classics. Here, Shirley McGreal, founder of the International Primate Protection League, reveals all.

Anyone publicising the plight of primates faces a dilemma: should they concentrate on 'sexy' species such as gorillas and chimpanzees, or should they give equal consideration to more lowly species, such as macaques and baboons?

I've always felt drawn to the latter groups of primates, and in 1987, I read a book that has since been a source of inspiration and encouragement. That book is Almost Human, by Shirley Strum. In 1972, Strum started her study of the 'Pumphouse Gang' of baboons at Kekopey Ranch in Kenya. At that time, many theories of male baboon aggression and dominance prevailed. As Strum started to unravel baboon behaviour, she quickly began to see that things were far more complex.

She learned that female baboons formed the stable core of baboon society and that the males stayed in groups for shorter periods, spending considerable time working their way into new groups. When Strum started her study, a male baboon, Ray, was working his way into the Gang. Ray took his time and used social skills – not his canine teeth. Strum was soon to learn that baboons have, in fact, a low aggression level.

Strum's account of her attempt to share her findings with baboonologists at a 1978 conference ("the worst 10 days of my life") is hilarious. She ended up being accused of inventing data, and was told that there had to be a male dominance structure among the Pumphouse baboons and that she must have missed it.

Strum's role as objective observer did not prevent her forming a deep attachment to 'her' baboons. When Kekopey Ranch was divided into small farms, the baboons inevitably began crop-raiding. Some of them were shot. Clearly, the Gang was doomed unless it was relocated.

It is at this point that the reader's admiration for Strum soars. Landowners were not enthusiastic about accepting new baboons, and it took all Strum's persuasiveness (which must have been considerable) to arrange the relocation of not just the Pumphouse baboons, but two neighbouring troops. It is to her immense credit that she succeeded in releasing them intact, and her account of the manoeuvres is riveting.

As Strum says, what she did is about reciprocity. Part of what she got, she gave back. To the baboons, yes, but also to her children, who, she says, may one day "be able to watch the Pumphouse Gang too."

Shirley McGreal's top ten

● Almost Human: A journey into the world of baboons, by Shirley Strum (Elm Tree Books, 1987, op).

● The Animal Connection, by Jean-Yves Domalain (Heinemann, 1978, op). A former animal smuggler exposes the filthy tricks of the trade. Nothing changes.

● The Apes, by Vernon Reynolds (Cassell, 1968, op). A big influence when I founded IPPL.

● Gorillas in the Mist, by Dian Fossey (Houghton Mifflin, 1983, op in UK). An introduction to the animals that the author calls "the greatest of the great apes."

● Himalaya, by Yoshizazu Shirakawa, preface by Sir Edmund Hillary (Harry N Abrams, 1972, op). Spectacular mountains and people.

● Orang-utan, by Barbara Harrison (Oxford University Press, 1988, op).

Early efforts to stop the orang-utan trade and to rehabilitate confiscated animals.

● Ring of Bright Water, by Gavin Maxwell (Penguin, 1974, £5.99). People who like primates tend to like otters, too. I don't know why.

● Travels in the Lands of the Gods (1893-1907): The Japan Diaries of Richard Gordon-Smith (Prentice-Hall, 1986, op). Early observations of Japanese fauna, flora and customs.

● The Wildlife of India, by E P Gee (Collins, 1964, op). Presents India's wildlife, including the rare golden langur named Prestbytis geei after the author.

● The Year of the Gorilla, by George Schaller (Ballentine Books, 1965, op). A pre-Fossey look at the mountain gorillas.